IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Note by the Director-General

I. Introduction

1. At the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth sessions in 1968 and 1969 consideration was given to a proposal by the Government of New Zealand that the CONTRACTING PARTIES take action to deal definitively with the problem of the continued existence of import restrictions applied contrary to the GATT and not covered by waivers.

2. At the twenty-fifth session the importance of a new and concrete initiative in this area was recognized, but there were divergencies of view among delegations as to the modalities and machinery to be employed. The matter was, therefore, remitted to the Council for further examination. It is hoped that this Note will assist the Council in its discussion of what is one of the most important issues before the CONTRACTING PARTIES.

II. The Facts

3. When the GATT was drafted in 1947, a basic principle was laid down in paragraph 1 of Article XI regarding the use of quantitative restrictions. When read together with Article II this meant, in general terms, that contracting parties accepted to afford any necessary protection to domestic industries by way of the tariff and not through quantitative restrictions, the use of which they renounced. Certain exceptions were provided for, both in other provisions of Article XI itself and in other articles of the General Agreement. But the language of paragraph 1 of Article XI could scarcely have been more categorical as to the basic rule.

4. It is a historical fact that, in the following years, notable progress was made toward the elimination of the quantitative restrictions that were the rule in nearly all countries just after the war. However, certain hard-core restrictions remained even where no general disequilibrium in external payments created a "balance-ofpayments" difficulty. Many such residuals, some maintained with, and some without, the cover of a justification in GATT terms, were associated with the inability of the major trading countries to find a mutually acceptable way of limiting agricultural protection. In 1960<sup>1</sup> the best procedure that could be devised as a first step to bridge this gap was to agree that each country would notify those of its restrictions which it considered to be inconsistent with the provisions of GATT; at the same time, the availability of the consultation procedure under Articles XXII and XXIII was underlined. This procedure, which was agreed to some nine years ago, has yielded very limited results. The developing countries have been trying in recent years, in conformity with Part IV of the General Agreement, to apply special pressure for the removal of those restrictions, legal or not, which bear on products of export interest to them. Progress has been limited by the fact that other developed countries are often the major suppliers of products of interest to them, or by the fact that the need for restrictions has proved to be rooted in larger agricultural policy issues.

5. The fact is that far less progress towards the solution of this important problem has been made in the last nine years than was made in the preceding decade. Further progress toward a definitive solution is overdue and is essential both in the interest of trade liberalization and of the General Agreement itself.

6. Quantitative restrictions, taken as a whole, severely encumber and distort international trade. In terms of number of notifications, they represent at least 20 per cent of the non-tariff barriers notified for inclusion in the inventory of such barriers under consideration in the Industrial Committee. Their importance and widespread application are also clearly brought out in the annexed illustrative table showing the BTN 4-digit categories subject to some degree of restriction as regards imports from one or more contracting parties into eighteen developed countries accounting for nearly three quarters of world trade. From the table it appears that many of the countries covered still have quantitative restrictions on a substantial range of products; in some cases the products affected are almost exclusively agricultural, but in others the range is wider. So far as information concerning them has been notified to the secretariat, the table includes both restrictions justifiable under provisions of the General Agreement or otherwise covered, as by waivers, and restrictions which are unjustifiable under the General Agreement.

It was not possible, with the resources at hand, to indicate the many 7. instances in which restrictions in force apply only to some of the possible foreign sources of supply with a resulting discriminatory effect. It is likely that many restrictions applicable to only a few contracting parties are entirely absent from the table. Among the restrictions which are listed, it is relatively easy to determine the discriminatory character of a restriction from indications as to its geographical application, but this information is often lacking and the situation is in any event less clear when an item is subject to discretionary licensing or licensed subject to bilateral quotas. This country-selective nature of restrictions in force of course tends to reduce the percentage of trade to which restriction applies, but highlights the problem of discrimination. All told a rough guess as to the trade affected might range from something like 7 per cent of total imports for the countries in this group having the most extensive restrictions, down to negligible proportions for those having the fewest. Precise figures, even if available, would not shed much additional light on the real problems involved, which, for the countries and products concerned, are far more severe than overall trade ratios would indicate, particularly where the restrictions apply on a discriminatory basis. The aggregate proportion of trade affected, however broken up as to countries or products, would moreover give little indication of the degree of restriction resulting from the measures in force. For in some cases a licensing requirement appears to involve no restriction, at least for most countries most of the time, whilst in other instances (which in the table are distinguished by the symbol DL for discretionary licensing) real restriction may be involved to the point where the term is hardly more than a euphemism for prohibition. There is also, of course, the difficulty of estimating, in the presence of a restriction, the trade that would take place if the restriction did not exist. What cannot be doubted is the seriously adverse effect that quantitative restrictions have on trade. Further details concerning the limitations of the illustrative table are contained in the headnote to the table.

8. Generally speaking, the percentage of trade affected by quantitative restrictions would tend to be higher if countries additional to those included in the table were also considered. There are, for example, six countries which invoke the balance-of-payments provisions of the General Agreement to justify restrictions about which they consult with the CONTRACTING PARTIES every year. Each of these countries restricts goods making up from perhaps a quarter to half of its imports (although the degree of restriction practised varies greatly from one to another). The table contains references to documentation where the restrictions of those countries may be found.

III. Future Procedures: Developed Countries

9. In the light of the above considerations and in the interests of making progress, the Council may wish to examine the desirability of a different approach outlined below. Among the main considerations which have been taken into account in making this proposal are:

- (a) the possibility and desirability of establishing a procedure for dealing more effectively with the problem of quantitative restrictions which would at the same time facilitate the work of the Committees on Agriculture, Industrial Products and Trade and Development; and
- (b) the widespread agreement at the twenty-fifth session with the view that there was something inequitable and anomalous about a procedure whereby contracting parties invoking articles of the GATT as justification for certain restrictions have to submit to consultation and examination while contracting parties applying restrictions inconsistently with GATT are treated more tolerantly.

10. The observations on the degree of application and on the effects of quantitative restrictions set out in Part II above and in the annexed table relate to quantitative restrictions as a whole, i.e. both those which are justifiable under the General Agreement and those which are not. This approach has also been applied in connexion with the notification of quantitative restrictions for inclusion in the inventory of non-tariff barriers; those notifications have been based exclusively on whether the measures concerned obstruct the flow of trade.

11. It would seem to the secretariat that it would be conducive to positive results if the Council, in its consideration of this question, were also to look at quantitative restrictions as a whole. While such an approach would not, of course, prejudice in any way the rights of contracting parties under the General Agreement, it might offer a worthwhile supplement or alternative to the present procedures, as a means of moving forward toward the elimination of quantitative restrictions. For once, all countries would be consulting on the whole range of restrictions maintained. In such a special examination organized for the purpose of seeking possibilities for the dismantling of restrictions, no country would refuse to consider these possibilities on the ground that a restriction was consistent with its GATT obligations. Equally, there would be no advance commitment by any country to remove any particular restriction, whether the measure in question were or werenot consistent with GATT obligations.

12. For the developed countries, where the effort to remove remaining quantitative restrictions would be concentrated, the establishment of a special Joint Working Group is suggested, to undertake work which would otherwise have to be organized for some restrictions in the Committee on Trade in Industrial Products and for others in the Committee on Agriculture. This Working Group, acting as agent of the two existing committees, would conduct consultations on all quantitative restrictions of the developed countries, giving priority to restrictions which have been notified.

13. The intention would be that this exercise would be completed within a resonably short fixed period. At the end of this period the Joint Working Group would cease to exist.

14. Each country would be expected to provide the Joint Working Group full information on the reasons for and the extent of its quantitative restrictions in so far as such information is not already available. Material prepared for the use of the Industrial Committee and the Agriculture Committee would presumably constitute, along with material prepared for balance-of-payments consultations, the greater part of the material needed for the Group's work.

15. In the light of the nature, need and purpose of the restrictions and of an assessment of the importance to trade partners of removal of the barriers an attempt would be made:

- (a) first, to see what restrictions could reasonably be considered susceptible to immediate relaxation or withdrawal;
- (b) second, to reach agreement on the dismantling of other restrictions, either on a unilateral basis, or through parallel action in another country or countries, or by agreements among pairs or groups of countries. This dismantling might in some cases be staged.

The objective in both (a) and (b) would be to achieve the desired result through arrangements not going in any major respect beyond the area of quantitative restrictions.

16. In the consultations, the Joint Working Group would encounter some restrictions the maintenance of which was closely linked to one or another country's internal support programmes, export subsidies, levies, customs procedures or other measures falling entirely outside the field of quantitative restrictions; many of these would be among the other NTB's on industrial products, or in the realm of agricultural policy. Such issues, being outside the realm of quantitative restrictions, would be beyond the terms of reference of the Joint Working Group. Whe: a quantitative restriction that was linked to some question external to the field of quantitative restrictions was reached in the consultations, the task of the Group would be to examine with the country maintaining that restriction how rapidly it could be dismantled on the assumption that a solution to the linked external question were found, presumably through the work of one of the main committees. The aim, therefore, would be to reach an understanding of what could be done - to provide in fact a potential liberalization programme - entirely without commitment but for use in the main committees at the appropriate time for inclusion in a balanced package of multilateral concessions.

17. The countries which would be consulted by the Joint Working Group are the following:

Australia Austria Canada Czechoslovakia Denmark EEC Belgium France Germany, F.R. Italy Luxembourg Netherlands Finland Iceland Ireland Israel Japan New Zealand Norway Poland Portugal South Africa Spain Sweden

Switzerland United Kingdom United States

IV. Developing Countries

18. There remain to be taken into account some fifty countries, mainly developing countries, most of them maintaining a fairly high level of restrictions for balance-of-payments or development reasons. Sixteen of these countries consult once every two years as developing countries under Article XVIII:B. The other thirty-six countries that make up the balance, nearly all of them newlyindependent developing countries, do not consult with the CONTRACTING PARTIES regarding their restrictions.

19. Article XVIII recognizes that the implementation of programmes and policies of economic development may in itself necessitate protective measures affecting imports, including quantitative restrictions, for balance-of-payments purposes or for the promotion of the establishment of particular industries with a view to raising standards of living.

20. This somewhat greater need which developing countries may have for the use of quantitative restrictions, and for their maintenance over longer periods of time, would justify a different approach for such countries in this special effort to deal with quantitative restrictions. It is suggested that those developing countries which have not so far notified their import restrictions to the secretariat might again be invited to do so. It could then be agreed that, for developing countries as a whole, there should be no special consultation analogous to that envisaged for developed countries, but that, instead, Article XVIII consultations would be arranged for developing countries maintaining quantitative restrictions and not already consulting under Article XVIII. In addition to the advantages for trade amongst themselves which developing countries would gain from the removal or relaxation of quantitative restrictions by countries in this group, these countries would gain an important forum in which to draw attention to their special needs, and could in that same context bring additional pressure on the developed countries to remove barriers specially important for their export trade.

ANNEX

Import Restrictions of Individual Contracting Parties

Developed countries

The following table shows in abbreviated form for each of eighteen developed contracting parties the products subject to quantitative restriction and the nature of the restriction. Similar data with respect to six additional contracting parties may be found in their latest submissions to the Committee on Balance-of-Payments Restrictions concerning their import restrictions. The pertinent documents for those countries are listed below. No comparable documentation exists for Czechoslovakia and Poland.

Data for the eighteen countries included in the table are taken from notifications to GATT - chiefly notifications by the country maintaining the restrictions as to its restrictions inconsistent with the provisions of GATT and not authorized by the CONTRACTING PARTIES. Account was also taken of notifications on State trading, on waivers and on escape-clause action. Notifications submitted by trade partners for the inventory of non-tariff barriers have also been used in some cases.

The nature of these sources means that there is no guarantee that all quantitative restrictions have been included. It is likely, for example, that many restrictions considered to be consistent with Article XX and some maintained under Article XXI have never been reported. Some restrictions regarded as justified by Protocols of Accession may also be missing.

In principle, the secretariat considers that the appropriate definition of quantitative restrictions is that contained in the report of the Panel of Experts in 1960 (Eleventh Supplement, page 208), but it is not clear that countries have followed that definition in their reports. There is much disagreement concerning licensing systems; for example, trade partners maintain that some such systems are restrictive whilst the countries maintaining the systems consider them nothing more than routine administrative aids. Borderline types of restrictions which may or may not be "quantitative" in nature will also be found missing.

In the secretariat's view, the residual notifications should also, in principle, cover restrictions even if they apply to only a few contracting parties but this is not always the case and it is likely that many restrictions applicable to one or a small number of contracting parties are entirely omitted from the list. Countries frequently omit restrictions maintained against countries concerning which they have invoked Article XXXV.

Finally, the summary indications of the type of régime in force are no real guide to the restrictiveness or liberality of the regulations in question. The symbol for licensing, "L", is used where no information has been provided as to the type of licensing and is obviously ambiguous; "DL", for discretionary licensing, presumably is less liberal than "LL" for liberal licensing, but there is no way to compare effects from one country to another or to rank such restrictions by comparison with other régimes such as global quotas. Only with trade data, data on domestic production and, perhaps, after inquiry among traders cuald one assess with any degree of assurance the effect of the restrictions. Similarly, indications on country applicability are very incomplete, because of inadequacies in the underlying notifications.
