Priorities for the WTO

Many businesses agree that the current economic outlook could be improved by:

- completing a Trade Facilitation Agreement
- finalizing information technology and services negotiations
- reducing tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade
- reforming and improving WTO dispute settlement procedures
- keeping protectionism at bay.

“The WTO’s role should be the Guardian of free trade and Initiator of negotiations on topical trade & business issues”
How can the WTO and businesses work better together?

52% of businesses would like networking events to be organized with WTO members.

56% would like business to be involved in WTO technical assistance and training.

61% would like business representatives to be allowed at WTO meetings.

Over 90% think business representatives should be involved in WTO training and capacity building for parliamentarians.

Trade policy making

Businesses would like to be fully involved in trade policy making by:

“providing feedback and input regarding business needs, so that governments can better see the benefits of furthering multilateral trade cooperation”.

“The business sector should provide information on obstacles and barriers present in their export markets but also in the home country.”

Trade negotiations

Many businesses believe they can play a more active role in advancing multilateral trade negotiations by:

“making clear at home and internationally that by far the best way to stabilize world trade is a multilateral agreement with clear sanctions if agreements are not followed by all participants”.

“The business sector should encourage their governments to participate earnestly in trade negotiations with the objective of reaching agreement, even if concessions must sometimes be made.”
