Noura is the rapporteur for the Geneva Peacebuilding Platform's community curation tracks: 'Harnessing the Economy for Peace' and 'A New Vision for Peacemaking.' Driven by a history in human rights advocacy, she is passionate about identifying the nexus between economic, political, and development objectives. In Kuala Lumpur, she documented and worked with conflict-affected asylum seekers. In London, she worked in the Business and Policy division at Asia House where she assisted in multi-stakeholder dialogues between senior decision-makers and industry leaders with the aim to drive political and economic engagement between Asia and Europe. She received a Bachelor's in International Relations from the SOAS, University of London and is currently pursuing a Master's in Development Studies specialising in Conflict and Global Security at the Graduate Institute, Geneva. Her dual research interest lies in examining the impact of emerging technologies on conflict dynamics alongside exploring the relationship between economic actors and peace.
