

TRADE CONTRIBUTES TO THE DEVELOPMENT AND DIFFUSION OF GREEN TECHNOLOGIES.

Some 35 per cent of funding to developing countries in the Aid for Trade initiative is earmarked for climate mitigation or adaptation projects, aimed at helping countries ensure a just, green transition.

A total of 89 WTO members support at least one of the recently launched environmental initiatives, regularly engaging with the business community, civil society, international organisations and academic institutions to address the “triple threat” of climate change, biodiversity loss and pollution.

The WTO's Committee on Trade and Environment is a forum for transparency and dialogue on trade and environment where members exchange information on their environment policies and where multilateral institutions brief the Committee on their work.
