---

(a) Description:

Contingency quotas (not so far applied) and restraints by some supplying countries for imports of meat of cattle (TSUS 106.10) and of meat of goat and sheep, except lamb (TSUS 106.20).

(b) Comments by other countries:

New Zealand considers that restraint action by suppliers acts as a form of restriction.

(c) Comments by country maintaining the measures:

The system of contingency quotas had not yet been applied. There are, however, restraint actions by principal suppliers to the United States between the fourth quarter of 1968 and the second quarter of 1972.

Import restrictions are in conjunction with programmes designed to stabilize supply and demand in the dairy industry, and to stabilize prices and domestic dairy incomes. (Applies also to items 04.03, 04.04, 18.06, 21.07 and 23.07.)

The United States has a very serious surplus of this product despite the fact that the acreage in peanuts is currently less than one half of that in 1948. The acreage has been held to the legal minimum; but improved growing methods have resulted in higher yields.

Import controls on peanuts are being continued to prevent material interference with United States programmes and operations relating to peanuts.

(See also item 17.01.)

The United States has no direct restrictions on the importation of sugar beets or sugar cane. Nevertheless, the requirement under the Sugar Act of 1948 that domestically produced sugar marketed in the United States must be made from beets or cane grown in the United States acts indirectly to restrict imports of sugar beets or sugar cane for the production of sugar. These indirect restrictions, however, do not affect imports for other purposes, such as animal feeds.
